What To Do When Tree Fell on Your House

Moving or cutting one part of the tree can release this pressure violently, causing unintended consequences elsewhere - logs rolling, splinters flying, or worse people getting hurt. You need to think twice before doing the tree removal on your own.

Make sure you stay focused and consider the important you need to take in dealing with this ugly scene.

- ❖ Your time is going to be much better spent talking to insurance claims adjusters and contractors.
- ❖ Take pictures of the scene from a safe distance. There is no need to get up close to get the nasty details.
- ❖ Next, it is time to hire the company that will remove the tree from the house.

Not all tree removal companies are equipped to deal with this situation. Before even asking for an estimate, make certain that the company carries liability and workers compensation insurance and has certified arborists on staff.

- ❖ The professional tree firm will remove the tree from the house. If any portion of the tree is left standing, it should probably be taken down to prevent future accidents. Ask the arborist on staff to provide a risk assessment if you have doubts.
- ❖ In case you have some damaged done to your property, a general contractor can do it. You will need a general contractor to assess the safety of the house before you can stay in it, anyway.

In the end, if you've survived without injury, then you are victorious. So many times, nature prevails in contests with man.
