Questions to Ask Your Prospective Tiler

Finding the best tiler will give you a lot of benefits but it takes time and research on your end. When it comes time to get the professionals in to do the tiling project for you, don't be shy to ask them a few simple questions with regards to the job they are going to be doing for you.

Here are a few easy questions that you should ask your tiler:

Have you done a project like this before?

It is always wise to ask a tradesman for references or if you can, speak to people that they have previously done work for.

Are you qualified?

It is not rude to ask for a tradesman's qualifications. With so many fake traders out there today always ensure that the person you are hiring to do your work has a recognised qualification.

How long will the job take?

Establishing a time scale is vital to keep a grip on costs. If you are paying your tiler for the time spent doing to work, it is not unheard of for a tradesman to drag the job on to get more money out of you.

How much will it cost?

Always agree on a fixed price before the work begins. If you are working on a renovation then keeping a close eye on your budget is crucial. Make sure to get a quote in writing from the tradesman and never pay for any work up front.

Do I need to have other tradesmen?

Establishing if there are other jobs to be carried out before the tiling is completed will avoid timely and costly hold ups.

Asking these easy questions before your work commences will ensure that the job goes smoothly, letting you sit back and enjoy your lovely new home.
